

When I was recruiting a group of students, I found Taras, and he found me. When I was a month ahead of the students I was teaching in the same program, Taras quickly caught up with me. Out of a group of 60 people, Taras was the best student and studied almost continuously for a whole year. The main thing is that he learned how to build a training program for himself, how to find answers and solve complex problems on his own, how to set goals and achieve them - all the things that a developer needs most. Plus humility and good teamwork. I'm sure that people like Taras are among the most talented and sought-after people in the labor market
